A New Painting:

"Untitled (#0159)"

I had grouped several paintings together in my dining room that were created about the same time and flowed well together, but recently pulled them for a showing in Orlando. Clearly, I needed to replace the empty space, so I got busy and did a 30" x 40" painting. After hanging it on the wall, I am quite pleased how much it brightens up the space.

Paintings Showing Through July 15th-Orlando, Florida

A big thank you to Starter Studio for letting me share my art in their space. Several of these paintings are from the “fiery” period of my work. I find the blue and orange combinations to be very energetic and intriguing.

For more information about Dr. Feelgood products, visit their website: <https://fla420shop.com/>. Or, even better, stop into their store to see their products and check out my paintings as well.

Paintings in Longwood, Florida:

I currently, and almost always, have paintings with Kaleidoscope Venue For The Arts. Kaleidoscope is an art studio and warehouse gallery, located at 1991 Corporate Square #181, Longwood, Florida 32750, website: <https://www.facebook.com/venueforthearts>. Their art themes vary each week, with a showing every Saturday from 7:00-10:00 p.m. They have a cash bar for beverages, including beer and wine. It's a great opportunity to talk with local artists and see their work.

“Albino Ray” and “Dreaming Bears” are included in the paintings I currently have available at Kaleidoscope.

For Fun:

I thoroughly enjoyed reading Mary Gabriel's new book, Ninth Street Women. Which will be more interesting, the book or the TV show?? I plan to watch the show also!

Ninth Street Women – Lee Krasner, Elaine de Kooning, Grace Hartigan, Joan Mitchell, and Helen Frankenthaler: Five Painters and the Movement That Changed Modern Art by Mary Gabriel. Image courtesy of Little Brown.

From Artnet, <https://news.artnet.com/art-world/ninth-street-women-amazon-prime-1526131>:

An illustrious group of artists—Elaine de Kooning, Helen Frankenthaler, Grace Hartigan, Lee Krasner, and Joan Mitchell—are coming to Amazon Prime! The streaming service has announced plans for a new television series, Ninth Street Women, developed by husband-and-wife duo Amy Sherman-Palladino and Daniel Palladino, who are also behind Gilmore Girls and The Marvelous Mrs. Maisel.

The new series is based on Mary Gabriel's book of the same name, which traces the intersecting lives and careers of the five women painters, all of whom were part of the historic artist-organized exhibition "Ninth Street Show" in New York in 1951.

A fascinating, hyper-detailed portrait of the post-war avant-garde art scene in New York, the book paints vibrant portraits not only of its main characters, but also of such artistic greats as Jackson Pollock, Willem de Kooning, Arshile Gorky, Franz Kline, Hans Hofmann, and many others.

Quote from the Book: "It was 1949, and government cold warriors were raiding libraries for suspect material. Books that had been considered classics were being removed because they were thought to contain subversive messages...She (Joan Mitchell) needed more than warmed-over vitality and scraps of time. Joan needed to be able to work unimpeded by life's demands to make the changes on her canvas she could feel but not yet execute..Joan would often say she carried landscapes within her..the clouds, the sky, the wind..the scene around every corner was a painting..Joan needed to be in a community of artists, looking at art - avante-garde American art, not the 'Frenchy' stuff she'd studied since she was a girl."
