my dear Sir,
You expressed a wish for a Sketch
by Alfred Crowquill' - England Scene you two - One col.d from nature - The coloured one is not at all in his style but will probably be preferred for a Lady's Album -
Believe me

Thursday Morn:

Dear Mr Hinxtall

Do not be disappointed with this exceedingly feeble sketch, I hope it will sometimes remind you of your Friend
Sankey

Yours Sincerely

In Memory of

THE REV. JOHN WILLIAMS,

WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE

AUGUST 20, 1855.

AGED 71.

It was with sincere regret that we recorded a fortnight ago the decease of the Rev. John Williams, of this city, which event took place at his residence in Duke-street on the 20th of August. Mr. Williams was a minister of the Countess of Huntingdon's connexion, assembling until lately in the Octagon Chapel, and for nearly forty years an inhabitant of this city, where his public character and private virtues had conciliated to him the respect and esteem of that large portion of his fellow citizens to whom he was known. As a minister of religion he was ever ready to co-operate with his brethren of all denominations in every effort to extend the kingdom of the Redeemer; and by his consistent piety, his earnest zeal, his sound judgment, the catholicity of his spirit, and the gentleness and urbanity of his manners, he secured for himself the regard of those who may have differed widely from him in some of the less important points of religious belief. As a citizen he was found aiding by his judgment and advice all those objects which contemplated the social and moral improvement of the city. On the platforms of the many religious and benevolent institutions which held annual meetings in this city, he was ever to be met with while in health to support and advocate their interests; while the cause of science, and the instruction of the mechanics of Chester in the lecture-room, had in him a firm advocate. To the poor his charities were seasonable and unostentatious, and in him many of the needy have lost a kind and sympathizing friend. But it was in the bosom of his family, and in the circle of his more intimate friends, that he was seen to the greatest advantage, where his varied information, his pervading and cheerful piety, his loving character, and his playful wit gave an inexpressible charm to his society. We feel that in the death of Mr. Williams the city of Chester has sustained a heavy loss, and it is with sincere respect and unaffected sorrow that we offer this tribute to his memory. A funeral sermon to improve the death of the reverend gentleman was preached on Sunday evening, in Queen-street Independent Chapel, by the Rev. Jas. Bridgman.—Extracted from the Chester Courant, August 29, 1855.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION EN ROUTE TO IRELAND.

Sunday, August 9th, 1835.

Embarked on board the William Penn, before six o'clock, and soon after steered for Dublin. On board were the munificent owner, Sir J. Tobin, his friend Mr. S. Turner, to whose conduct the voyage was (if we may form an opinion from its most agreeable results) most judiciously assigned; Capt^n. Denham, R.N. who, in his naval survey, has laid down a New Channel into the Mersey, of vast importance to the commerce of Liverpool; Professor Sedgwick, Dr. Daubenny, Mr. Smith, the father of geological science, Colonel Dick, of New Orleans, Dr. Yelloly, Dr. Dow, the botanist, Mr. Joseph Brookes Yates, and a party of between thirty and forty, including several fair ladies.

This excursion, which, under any circumstances, must have been grateful to the feelings, were it only from its exhibiting, in so princely a manner, the attention of an English merchant to the interests of science and the comforts of those engaged in scientific pursuits, was rendered still more delightful by all the occurrences which attended it. The party, well pleased with a reception and entertainment which reminded them of the Medici of Italy, or still more forcibly of their own native Gresham, had proceeded but little on their way
